

A fine example of a mainline telegraph pole with crossarms filled with insulators and wires. Note the 'roofed' top of the pole to shed rain and snow. The many styles of insulators in common use is prominent. On the pole, wires would be for the dispatcher's circuit, commercial operations (news papers, commercial telegraph, stock tickers etc.) and railway signalling circuits.

(CNR Public Affairs, #23112)